

Rules on telemarketing should be tightened. I pay my local telephone provider $5.00 per month to screen calls that do not send a caller ID. Now some telemarketers are sending an ID, but it is a telephone number that does not receive incoming calls, therefore, I cannot call them to tell them to remove me from their list (most of these calls are caller hangups so one answers the phone and nobody is there). I think that telemarketing firms should be required to call each potential customer and secure positive permission from that customer before adding that number to its calling list(s) for any and all future solicitation calls. Also, there should be a central number for us to call to get on a DO NOT CALL list for all telemarketers.
